JOHANNESBURG - South African security forces have killed 10 alleged insurgents of the out-lawed African Naturnal Congress in two separate gun battles during the past two days, the governmen announced Friday.

The deaths bring to 32 the number of suspected ANC operatives killed or captured since the underground resistance movement intensified its campaign of assassina-tion, sabotage and urban bombings after the imposition of a nationwide state of emergency.

Altogether, 131 people have died since the declaration June 12. Separately, Winnie Mandela, the wife of Nelson Mandela, the imprisoned leader of the guerrilla organization, confirmed that her bus-band would refuse to meet with Sir Geoffrey Howe, the British foreign secretary, during his scheduled dip lomatic mission to South Africa in two weeks. Mrs. Mandela spoke after visiting her husband in prison in Cape Town. Her statement means that all of the leading anti-apartheid ac-tivists in South Africa will be avoiding Sir Geoffrey during his visit here.

He said that no further negotiations were anticipated on the accord, which was suspended by President Fidel Castro last year to retaliate for broadcasts to Cuba by U.S. operated Radio Marti.

The failure of the talks appeared to remove any immediate prospects for implementing the immigration accord under which Cuba would have taken back almost 3,000 Cuban criminals and mental patients who went to the United States in a massive 1980 boat exodus.

Mexican Troops Seize Police Offices

CIUDAD JUAREZ, Mexico (AP) — Mexican soldiers armed with bayonets seized control of the police department in this border city amid rising political tensions stemming from a dispute over state elections held Sunday.

The soldiers stormed the police headquarters at bayonet point Thursday and declared themselves in charge, said the Ciudad Juarez manager, Sergio Conde Varela. "It's an illegal action," Mr. Conde added, Jesus Escalona Berumen, a representative of the Chilmahua state government, later took charge of the department and its 400 patrolmen.

The Ciudad Juarez administration has been in the hands of the opposition National Action Party for three years. The party is claiming massive, electoral fraud by the governing Institutional Revolutionary Party in elections in Chihuahua for the state's governorship, 67 mayorships and 14 legislative seats. The party has claimed victory in the elections. The official results have not been released.

Reagan Says Tax Revision Must Include Low Rates

By David Hoffman

DOTHAN, Alabama - President Ronald Reagan, campaigning for revision of the tax system, has warned Congress against any "sig-nificant departure" from the low tax rates included in the Senateapproved overhaul plan.

Mr. Reagan, in a speech Thursday aimed at capturing some of the political credit for tax revision, said that "the most important aspect of tax reform" is reducing tax rates for individuals and corporations.

His remarks were intended as a signal to the House-Senate conference committee, which is to begin fashioning a compromise version of the legislation.

He sought to lay out benchmarks for the conference, but remained vague on many key points.

cratic missile defense program, has some oddly matched fans and foes. The leading believers, after Mr. Reagan, seem to be the Russians. Last mooth they offered to cut their missiles by a third for a promise that the Strategic Defense Initiative would be confined to the laboratory for 15 more years. Yet at the same moment Congress was cutting back the "star wars" budget, prompting Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger to denounce this "attempt to strangle the program in its cradle." Why would Congress wish to kill a program that so petrifies the Russians? Though the defense secretary refuses to admit it, the Pentagon has twins in its "star wars" cradle. One is the sickly child of Mr. Reagan's vision, a system to defend people and cities. The other, sturdy but of no acknowledged parentage, is the Pentagon's plan to try to defend only missile silos. Congress is souring on city defense, in large measure because the SDI remains decades away from being able to defend cities. It is oot a city defense that has the Russians sweating but a missile-silo defense whose technology is now in the realm of the possible. And that's the objective to which the Senate Armed Services Committee wants the program committed, but at a more measured pace.

Three immense technical obstacles loom ever larger in the path of a nationwide. umbrella defense. First is the colossal effort required to erect the umbrella. The SDI would require from 600 to 5,000 shuttle flights, costing between $30 billion and $600 billion. NASA, having strained to launch 15 shuttles a year, would have to

"Star wars," President Reagan's idiosyn- dispatch one every 44 hours. The second labor lies in writing instructions for the computers that would manage the "star wars" battle. Even if it were technically possible to write the oecessary software, which experts dispute, there would be no way to test it completely.

A third task, which looks ever more intractable, is mounting a defensible platform from which to destroy missiles in their boost phase. If the defense failed at this point before the warheads have dispersed from the booster rocket, chances of stopping them later would be much reduced. Yet the space platforms for a SDI system are such easy targets that no one knows how they could be defended. In a staff report prepared for a group of Democratic senators, scientists have concluded "that spacebased, boost-phase defenses can oever be made survivable, unless by treaty."

No wonder the Senate Armed Services Committee wants the major emphasis of "star wars" research redirected toward a "survivable and cost-effective defense of U.S. strategic forces." It chopped $1.5 bil-lion off the $5.4-billion budget Mr. Weinberger requested. The House Armed Services Committee has made a similar reduction. That still leaves plenty of money to fund research on silo defense and keep the Russians at the bargaining table. "Star wars" has lived off glitz for long enough. It's time to restore it to what it was before Mr. Reagan's 1983 speech: a vigorous research program permitted by the antiballistic missile treaty of 1972 and designed to insure against any technical advance made by a comparable Soviet program.

Mexico Bashes Itself

One of the charges that badly stung Mexicans last spring was the claim of some Americans, like Senator Jesse Helms, the North Carolina Republican, that its ruling Institutional Revolutionary Party lacked legitimacy. Along with officials of the Reagan administration and others, we implored the critics to stop bashing Mexico and show some sympathy for its problems. Well, look who's bashing oow. State elections in Mexico last Sunday were rife with fraud. And the accusers, accused and victims are all Mexicans.

The dominant PRI claims its mandate both from the Mexican Revolution of 1910-17 and from the elections held regularly ever since. Revolutionary mandates may be eternal, but democratic ones require review. Not once since Mexico's reigning party was founded in 1929 has an opposition party ever won the nation's presidency or any of the 31 state governorships. Even one-party New York City has occasionally been kinder to Republicans.

To say the opposition in Mexico never won may be overstating matters. No such victory has ever been certified. In the past decade, polls and interviews have shown that many voters in the more independentminded northern region support the pro-capitalist National Action Party, or PAN. Yet official results always favor the PRI, even in acknowledged PAN strongholds. Typically, announcement of these results is accompanied by accounts of ballot stuffing and ballot switching.

The same sorry pattern appeared in last Sunday's election in Chihuahua, the state bordering on west Texas. Official results have oot been announced, but the PRI has claimed a most improbable sweep. Reports of gross irregularities abound. In Juarez, for example, voter turnout was mysteriously twice as large as in the previous two elections, and known PAN activists found their names dropped from voter rolls.

Mexico's day-to-day relations with the United States will not be greatly affected by these now-familiar frauds, But the Mexican government's relations with its own people inevitably must be, particularly as more scrupulous elections are becoming the rule in Latin America.

Governments that must ask sacrifice and patience from the voters ought to be doubly concerned about their legitimacy in the public's eyes. True nationalists in Mexico would bristle less at these charges and reflect oo them more.

When Woes Are Inherited

that famess is often an inherited condition. Last week some doctors reported on a test of several thousand sets of twins. Before that there was a study of adopted children. And in the past week there was one involving 130 Southwest American Indians. All suggested that obesity often has more to do with a person's genetic inheritance than with the cating habits be has learned. On balance, said a doctor who directed a couple of the studies, this is oothing to get discouraged about. People who may be obese by inheritance can still lose weight, bot at least now they're learning why it's so hard for them to do so. For our part, we'd add that it might cut down on the fat jokes - that sort of thing doesn't go over so well when it involves someone's ancestors and perhaps even win for the overweight a new measure of understanding from the thin community, a group oot always noted for its tolerance. In fact, we have a feeling that in time a lot more generally misunderstood conditions than obesity are going to be found to be genetic in origin, and we'd like to suggest a few of them for the appropriate research. One is the tendency to forget names. It would be a comfort to sufferers to see that when certain identical twins are introduced

The evidence continues to accumulate to 10 people at widely separated parties, each forgets all 10 names instantaneously, and that at times the pair of them even forget one another's names.

Another candidacy for study is the widespread tendency to drive an automobile for a good number of miles after the oil-pressure warning light comes on. It would increase scientific understanding of this condition and perhaps save quite a few marriages if a study could trace the phonomenon back through generation after generation of melted engine blocks and mechanics saying, "Oh boy, this repair is going to cost you."

The same could be done for the affliction that causes people to recapitulate for their companions the entire plots of movies they have just seen. "Our research shows," scholars will surely announce some day, "that this condition dates back to man's earliest origins. We have found cave paintings in which a person is pictured talking at length while most of his companions roll their eyes toward what passed for a ceiling in those days and one of them lies supine, apparently either sleeping or bored to death. This is only a start. The point is that it's time to move on from obesity. Round up the usual twins, and let's get going.

The Other Nuclear Threat

The possibility of terrorists gaining access to nuclear explosives has been studied for years, with the conclusion usually being that it is more easily said than done. However, a group of safety experts now warn that the danger is growing. The International Task Force on the Prevention of Terrorism, a group of scientists and engineers from Western nations, cited the growing evidence of black or gray markets in weapons-grade nuclear fuel, plus the increase in plutonium from spent reactor fuel. Other factors are the proliferation of public information about nuclear weapons; more so-phisticated terrorists; and often inadequate security at nuclear facilities.

Likely scenarios involve the infiltration of ouclear power plants or university research reactors by terrorists who would cause a radioactive release or steal materials. The group suggested measures ranging from greater security around ouclear plants to greater international cooperation, especially between America and the Soviet Union. These are sensible suggestions.

Sanctions Can Work: Just Ask the French

By Flora Lewis

There is no sign that the government in Pretoria intends to abandon racism as the basis of its rule.

PARIS — The argument for tightening sanctions on South Africa is becoming irresistible, though little room is left for logic. No doubt President P.W. Botha and Afrikaner hard-liners would not be swayed. Mr. Botha has virtuone's own humanity.

The fierce censorship that has ally invited sanctions to show his country's defiance. But the South not see its future in the same light. Some sanctions would help split moderates among Afrikaners from the dithards, and add to the incentives for businessmen themselves to press their government to relent. At the same time, sanctions would reinforce moderates among blacks who are threatened with losing all influence for restraint to radicals who insist there is no escape from apartheid except by more violence. But where is the logic for diplomats when Bishop Desmond Tute refuses to see Britain's Sir Geoffrey Howe, and agrees to see Mr. Botha? Where is the logic in claiming sanctions don't work when France is crowing about the way its sanctions and threats bullied New Zealand ioto releasing the two French agents involved in blowing up the Rainbow Warrior?

There were face-saving compro-mises in the French-New Zealand accord, but essentially it is a result of carefully calculated economic pressure. The French barred New Zealand imports into New Caledonia and brazened their way around European Community rules by having customs damage or destroy goods coming to France via Belgium, on the pretext of inspection. Bales of wool were slashed apart ostensibly to see if they contained caches of heroin. Frozen lambs' brains were examined box by box until the shipmens thawed and spoiled. Then — the clincher — France threatened to veto Britain's imports of New Zealand butter because the EC requires unanimous consent to renew import quotas.

The French claim was that the two agents were acting under official orders, and therefore could oot be held responsible for the destruction of the ship in Anckland harbor and the death of a Portuguese photographer on board, Hardly a thesis with standing in international law. But Paris didn't rely on law: It relied on sanctions.

Of course, there are key differences from the case of South Africa. France and New Zealand are both reasonable states that were arguing over an essentially minor, isolated issue of politics, jurisprudence and national image.

South Africans are fighting over basic issues of human rights and dignity affecting the very nature of the state. Outsiders will oot decide the outcome. But they have a right and responsibility to show where they stand, and a very substantial economic and strategie as well as moral interest in trying to promote a solution by agreement instead of by bloodshed.

The Commonwealth conference next month will put heavy pressure on Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher of Brit-ain, who persuaded the European Community to wait a little longer and take account of America's position. The United States should tell her now there is no use waiting. France can tell her sanctions can make a difference.

The New York Times.

Mrs. Thatcher May Be Right to Say No

LONDON — Why has Britain's foreign secretary, Sir Geoffrey Howe, been launched on what looks like a "Mission Impossible" in search of a diplomatic breakthrough to end the evil of apartheid in South Africa? A short answer is that his prime minister, Margaret Thatcher, will do anything to delay the decision on economic sanctions against the Botha government.

The same put-down is as easily applied to the Reagan administration's well-publicized "shift in emphasis" to strike up closer relations with black leaders and anti-apartheid whites in South Africa, And an equally cynical motive can be read into reports from Bonn that West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl is under heavy pressure, even from within his own party, to propose a "Summit Impossible." It would include President P.W. Botha, the African National Congress, front-line states, Britain, the United States and West Germany. A high-ranking British official expresses what would seem to be the guiding spirit: "We must be seen to be doing something." But oothing too harsh or too hasty. Self-serving commercial, economic and politica imperatives are overriding considerations. Maybe we are witnessing a great cop-out by Western powers.

But unless you are confident that the United States, the European community, the Commonwealth (whose 49 members include a fair number of black African states) could ever agree on a sanctions policy that would do more good than harm, allowance must be made for a second opinion.

Call it the Thatcher Opinion, not only because she is its most opinionated proponent. She is better placed than any of the other key players to play a decisive role. She has the best connection with Ronald Reagan, whose distaste for sanctions nearly matches hers. Britain has just assumed the six-months' presidency of the EC Commission, where Mrs. Thatcher has another kindred spirit states. And she has the weight of British custody, so to speak, of the Commonwealth.

That said, you have only to not the nearly mutinous mood of black African Commonwealth members, the challenge Mr. Reagan faces from sanctions advocates in the Congress, the rumblings of discontent from the European Community and the opposition uproar in the House of Commons to appreciate that Mrs. Thatcher's position is as precarious as it is pivotal. She cannot make a common sanctions policy. But she may be capable of breaking one.

For she is in a Falklands mode, painting herself almost daily into a ighter corner, scathing in defense of her position. If she has left herself any dignified line of retreat, it is in her careful distinction between general "punitive sanctions" and economic measures that are mere "gestures" or "signals" of the outside world's revulsion of apartheid. She could, then, fall back to such further measures as those already imposed: arms sales, governmentto-government loans, recall of military attaches, a ban on buying gold coins or selling computers to South Africa security forces. But she "totally rejects" the argument that even black leaders in South Africa and the "front-line" states are ready to accept far tougher measures at the cost of greater economic distress.

Against the immorality of apartheid she casts the immorality in southern Africa of throwing blacks out of work and depriving starving children of food, while also bringing economic hardship on her own people by the application of measures that will not work.

She foresees the South African government hardening, not softening, in its resistance to change, while inflicting heavy reprisals on frontline states whose economies are vul-nerable. She is appalled at the thought of banning purchase of strategic minerals from South Africa when the principal alternative source and the certain beneficiary is the Soviet Union.

She was reminded in a recent interview that she had once said "If I were the odd one out and I were right, it wouldn't matter, would it?" The obvious answer is that it might matter a lot. But there is weight to the evidence thrust upon a visitor to No. 10 Downing Street: the past experience with "punitive" sanctions, the economic data, the intran-sigence of Afrikaners against outside pressure, and the modest, slow reform already achieved.

It is all enough to make you won-der whether Mrs. Thatcher might just be right. Washington Post Writers Group.

'Ronnie, you don't seem to know your way around Africa.'

The West's Celebration of Infertility Could Be Costly

WASHINGTON — While literate Americans have lain awake worrying about global over-population, another threat has been gaining momentum: a collapse of birthrates in industrial democracies.

The issue has become a major one for European leaders. At stake are great-power status, the philosophy of the welfare state, and the status of immigrants who could arouse nativist backlash in countries where the original stock is dwindling. Here are the statistics:

Between 1965 and 1985, fertility rates of the industrial democracies tumbled far below the Zero-Population-Growth, or replacement level. In several cases, population decline set in, with deaths exceeding births.

In demographers' terms, a fertility rate of 2.1 babies per woman ensures the population will stay level over the long run, discounting immigration. As of 1983, West Germany and Denmark each had a rate of 1.3, the Netherlands and Italy 1.5, Japan 1.7, France and the United Kingdom 1.8. In the United States, the rate tum-bled from 3.6 in 1955 and 2.9 in 1965 to 1.7 in 1976, and has since hovered at around that figure.

The geopolitical implications are large. From 1900 to 1950, the Western nations and Japan accounted for roughly 30 percent of the world's population. That figure is now 15 percent. Even assuming a continued decline of fertility in the Marxist and Third World nations, stable rates in the West, and continued immigration into the United States, it will plunge to 9 percent in another 40 years.

In 1983, a call for collective action by European Community countries was issued by Pierre Béregovoy, then minister for social affairs in France, where the threat has transcended party lines. In 1978, President Valery Giscard d'Estaing, a Ganllist, argued that "a society no longer able to assure the replacement of generations is a society condemned." President François Mitterrand argued recently that "the decline in the birthrate constitutes a grave menace for the West." In West Germany, in the decade after 1966, the oumber of families with three or more children declined by two-thirds. In Sweden in 1976, deaths exceeded native births for the first time. Behind these developments has been a common fear: displacement by other peoples. West Germany ceased admitting new "guest workers" in 1974, followed shortly by Swedish and French immigration shutoffs. The reason is not hard to see: by 1975, there were 235,000 more deaths than births among the native Germans, while the immigrant workers had 99,000 more births than By Allan Carlson deaths. In France, expansion of the population since 1975 is attributed almost exclusively to the high birthrate of immigrant North Africans. In both cases, reaction against immigra-tion set in after the native population after World War II, birthrates began started declining.

The debate now appears to be spreading to the United States. U.S. News & World Report has recently

Of course, the defenders of market capitalism and liberal individualism had argued that the crisis was only temporary, and birthrates would climbing throughout the Western world, finally seeming to stabilize slightly above the replacement level in the 1950s and early '60s.

about depopulation. France in 1800, with 28 million persons, was still the demographic equal of the Russian Empire. Then fertility decline brought stagnation. Between 1870 ity. What had changed? and 1940, the French population remained stuck at 40 million. In the latter year, shortly after Hitler's armies occupied Paris, Marshal Pétain lamented: "Tno few children, too few arms, and too few allies - those were the reasons for our defeat."

Philosophers linked the birth decline to a spiritual and cultural crisis in the West. A majority of pro-natalists agreed on the need to prohibit the sale of contraceptives, and to strengthen prohibitions on abortion. But pro-natalist Social Democrats dissented, arguing that modern parents would not relinquish control over their fertility.

On the causes of the population point toward fertility decline, risis there was more agreement. The If the United States stood splencrisis there was more agreement. The problem, said both sides, lay in their countries' wrenching shift to the new these economic facts of life might be world of industrial societies. The collapse of a family-oriented economy, Nancy Folbre, a sociologist, writes in an article for Feminist Studies, is precisely what happened in Europe and the United States during the 1960s and '70s. Child-raising now imposes "truly phenomenal economic costs upon parents" and provides no benefits. All existing economic incentives, she concludes,

So what's to be done? We could adopt the feminist agenda. This would include men taking equal responsibility for all aspects of child care. We could also create strong pronatalist economic policies. This has recently been attempted in several Eastern Bloc countries. However, the changes have served primarily to al-ter the timing of births rather than the fertility rate. e fertility rate. We could change economic incentives. Instead of taxing everyone and creating government payments and dependency for families, we could instead turn to the tried-and-true American method of social policy: use tax credits and exemptions to allow families to keep more of their carned income. We could restore cultural values that favor childbearing. Our culture now celebrates infertility, a value clearly derived from changes in everything from our religion to schools which oo longer teach principles of obligation and responsibility to one's age, to art and bterature which now cast marriage and procreation as backward while extolling unencumbered sex and self-absorption. It is unportant to remember that the economic principles undergirding family life could crumble only after decades of such cultural softening. Their restoration can occur only after these cultural foundations of family life are recovered.

It's nonsense to insist, as the predent does, that only military pressu from the contras can force the Sa dinists to sign such a treaty. Cont dora officials know it's the other wi around; the contra war is the prin barrier to such a treaty.

This policy would leave the Marist Sandinists in power; even will their external reach circumscribed b treaty and by American policy, th no doubt would be bitter medicit for Mr. Reagan, But America has n more obligation to install democra by force in Nicaragua than it does Chile, or South Africa.

The United States has every reson, however, to beed its own lecture to the world on the values of self determination and nonintervention It's not yet too late to stop the spin toward an unwanted and unneces sary war in Central America.

The Vhen the Machinery of Law Into the Bedroom Is intrudes Into the Bedroom

> a tat scenario has not happened. It is recently upheld by the Supreme want and heterosexual conduct. It erms oral and anal sex by anyone, thing it by up to 20 years in prison.
> Solving at the Georgia law as it is > The written puts the Supreme Court don in a different light from the one sich it has been widely viewed. In light, I wonder whether the self-on knew what they were doing.

Georgia case was brought by Millian Hardwick, a homosexual who the federal courts to declare the saw unconstitutional. The Supreme dealt with his suit in a manner lowed the truth of the legal adage 15 to 4 majority said Mr. Hard-ling length was asking the Supreme Court to the Constitution "a fundamental in the constraint of a fundamental order of the constraint of a fundamental solution of the constraint of the constraint

m in the case. So we can see if we hand to the greatest of modern, and ratives on the Supreme Court, the lim Marshall Harlan — to his when the court, in 1961, first

But when a state expresses at views by regulating behavior, the crucial issue for constitutional to demand the contract to use the adgment is its "choice of means." ecticut, he said, "is asserting the ecticut, he said, is assering in enforce its moral judgment by the gupon the most intimate details harrial relation with the full powers. estimated relation with the fail the criminal law. Potentially, this illow the deployment of all the criminal machinery of the criminal lests, searches and sezures."

there exactly was the real issue in organ case; the intrusion of the law into the bedroom. The tution does not mention "privait it protects "liberty" from state tion without due process of law. and in its most basic sense" must

If the Georgia authorities had prosecuted and convicted a married couple under the sodomy law, the Supreme Court would have had to face that issue. (A Georgia couple calling themselves
Doe tried to join the case, but the lower courts held that they lacked standing) Similarly if a homosexnal had actually been convicted and sentenced under the statute, the Supreme Court would have found it more difficult to avoid seeing the real character of the law. Indeed, Justice Lewis F. Powell said that a conviction and "sentence of long duration" would raise a question of cruel and unusual punishment in violation of the Fighth Amendment to the Constitution.

But Mr. Hardwick was not convicted of anything. He was arrested after being discovered in homosexual activity, but Georgia prosecutors declined to press the case. He then brought his civil suit against the statute.

It is an old rule that the Supreme Court will not decide constitutional issues in the abstract. Yet here it rushed to pass judgment on a law that was not pressed against Mr. Hardwick and has not been used for decades.

The Hardwick case will be seen I believe, as a classic example of the unwisdom of taking constitutional issues wisdom of taking constitutional issues to the courts prematurely. Mr. White made a point of saying that the court was not passing ou the desirability of laws like Georgia's. But the late Alexander Bickel reminded us that the Supreme Court is a "legitimating force," too. If the unnecessary sodomy decision does anything, it will tend to legitimate ata-vistic attitudes in our society. vistic attitudes in our society.

of European culture. The American artist in Europe is hardly a new phenomenon. Since the 19th century, young American writers, composers, painters and others have crossed the Atlantic to study and live in the birthplace of Western artistic tradition. Most returned eventually to the United States, contributing greatly thereby to the nascent American cultural life. After World War II, stimulated by immigration of large numbers of European artists, many of them Jews, America began to assert itself as the new

Last night I attended a Fourth of July Mecca of Western culture. Europe continued to attract students, armed with Fulbright grants, but it seemed to many that European cultural institutions were in a state of decline in comparison to those of the New World.

There have been many changes in the United States in the last few years, however, that bode ill for the arts. As we spoke together it was clear that none of us had any plans to return to America to live and work. We all had heard from forced those with moderate incomes to the suburbs, away from the contacts and stimulation of the city. The newly pro-posed tax legislation, with the elimination of many deductions, promises to be disastrons for free-lance artists. In the absence of substantial government sup-port, innovative projects require inordinate amounts of time spent in fundraising and public relations, often to the detriment of the final product.

The materialist, consumerist society that America has become, so beautifully manifested in the Statue of Liberty celebration in New York, has room only for commercially successful artists: movie stars, pop singers, glamorous conduc-tors and prima donnas. The larger artistic community, which needs public sup-port to survive, is being forced out of business or into exile. Most of us would friends and colleagues back home of increasing difficulties facing artists. Outs in educational spending, from the primary school through to the university, have made teaching positions scarce.

Real-estate speculation in big cities has al philosophy in the United States, it may be a long time before we celebrate the "Glorious Fourth" at home.

Where Was All That Jazz?

As an American journalist who is traveling in Europe, primarily to cover jazz festivals (Lugano, Umbria, Pescara) featuring a preponderance of American musicians, it struck me, as I watched the Fourth of July celebrations for Lady Liberty on Swiss television, how conspicuously absent jazz was from the pro-ceedings in New York.

In Europe and Japan, people are aware of what this music means and its relationship to the true culture and ideals of the United States.

Instead of Dizzy Gillespie and Lionel Hampton, we were given Neil Diamond and that corny Broadway choreography I like to call the "Peter Gennaro" syndrome for lack of something better. We deserved something better.

At least Frank Sinatra supplied some class to the proceedings.

water than white water. We were part of a grueling week's white water rafting expedition organized by Outward Bound, a nonprofit educational organization in Greenwich, Connecticut,

The chairman of a steel company in Texas was attracted by the adventure of the expedition. A stockbroker in New York was looking for a way to kickstart his mental faculties. An interior decorator from Greenwich, after a sticky divorce, was looking for a way to move her improving life to a higher plane. Some had come simply because friends told them they should. One or two said it was a good way to confront a mid-life crisis. We met our instructors at Deerlodge Park, about 53 river miles from the Utah border. After some basic lessons about white water rafting, we pushed off in three boats, the rancous bantering masking the apprehension that recruits feel as they enter basic training.

It was peaceful. For boot camp, this wasn't so bad. The instructor in our raft said that although the boats can and do flip over in the rapids, she had never been in one that had overnmed. Only three people had been swept out of her raft during her many years on the river.

Then the weather changed malevo-lently. The sky turned a bilious graygreen, the temperature dropped precipi-tously, a wind whipped up the canyon. During a momentary hill, I tried to change position in the raft and through a combination of supreme clumsiness and wave action, was tossed out into the icy river hindquarters first, becoming the fourth person to go overboard during our instructor's career.

In retrospect, the dunking was an omen of misery to come. After dinner which, like all camp food, can best he described as mush, we turned in. In our sleeping bags with a thin plastic cover suspended over us, we looked like platoons of mummies,

A few of ns slept, Most tossed and turned on the hard ground, rolling into burrs or a wayward cactus, Toward morning, it started. The pitter-patter of a slow rain on the plastic covering above our heads turned to a drumbeat.

Even in foul-weather gear, there is nothing quite so exquisitely miserable as sitting in a raft with water up to the calf The Hartford Courant.

HARTFORD, Connecticut — The for seven or eight hours, clothes soaking. Surprisingly, we were not broken. Mo-Surprisingly, we were not broken. Mo-rale, while not soaring was not muti-nous. We told ourselves that nothing could be this bad and that when the sun showed itself the rest of the week would be doubly enjoyable.

And it was. The next day, the blue skies returned and the sun dried our clothes and warmed our spirits. The perils of the river diminished. One value I had not expected to hone on the expedition was toleration. At each major rapid, we took turns steering the raft and call-ing out commands. Six of us functioned as galley slaves, paddling madly, while the seventh tried to steer us through We came to Outward Bound with different abilities and strengths. We were appreciative when a skilled helmsman brought us through a nasty rapid. Yet when someone less adept was having trouble, we found ourselves shouting encouragement rather than cursing. The day of rock climbing and rappel-ling, something we both looked forward to and feared mightily, finally came. If misery is being in a waterlogged raft for a day in freezing rain, then abject fear is trying to force rebellious feet to walk backward over the edge of a 150-foot cliff. Yet, with many mouns, expletives and a few tears, we all did it. It was at the rock climb that I witnessed an event that was both a meta-phor for life and what Outward Bound stands for. A stockbroker had said he was burned out. You could sense it from the weary look of his eyes. He started up and immediately began to have difficul-ty. He missed a footbold here, slipped there, groped unsuccessfully for a hand-hold. Before he was a third of the way up, he was out of breath, perspiring and frustrated. He finally found a narrow edge and crawled up on it.

There he stopped, exhausted. He was argning with himself in saity language, the profanities ringing off the canyon walls. That ledge represented his position in life, He could stay where he was, which wouldn't do him any could be which wouldn't do him any good, he could retrace his steps and fail or break through the menual barriers that held him hostage and climb upward.

He chose to go on. He found a crevice, then a handhold, used his knees when be couldn't get a foothold and made it to the top. When he reappeared a half an bour later, he was a changed man. He was dirty, sweaty and tired, but his eyes sparkled. "It's amazing now powerful a small tochold can be," he said.

The Outward Bound philosophy is that we tend to draw circles around our lives and live within those confines. A wilderness expedition can show that almost anything is possible if we break through the limits we set for ourselves.

to be wounded. The dead were not identified, aithough police described them as "trained ANC terrorists" who were believed to have crossed the border from Botswana.

The police also said they seized a large quantity of Soviet-made weapoury, including limpet mines, hand grenades, automatic rifles and pistols and ammunition.

Limpet mines have been used in bombings at a bus stop, restaurant, hotel and supermarket in recent weeks around Johannesburg and Pretoria. The ANC, which is based in Lusaka, Zambia, has neither claimed responsibility for these attacks nor denied that they may have been carried out by operatives inside South Africa.

Managua Assails Bishops on Deaths Church's Silence on Victims of Border Mine Is Faulted

By Stephen Kinzer New York Times Service

MANAGUA — An explosion last week that killed 32 persons as they rode in a truck through a remote part of northern Nicaragua has become a new source of conflict between the government and Roman Catholic bishops.

According to reports in the pro-government press, all 32 vic-tims, who included women and children, were civilians. The reports said they died when a mine placed by rebels exploded beneath their truck near the remote village of San José de Bocay.

The bishops are under attack for not having condemned the killings. The official statement in which the government an-nounced it had decided to expel Bishop Pablo Antonio Vega from Nicaragua said that the victims at San José de Bocay had been "murdered by Reagan's and Vega's mercenaries." On Sunday, the front page of the newspaper Nuevo Diario, which supports the Sandinist government, displayed four pho-tographs of burned corpses and bereaved relatives under the banner headline "Vega's Work; These Are the Crimes the Bishop

Radio Sandino, the voice of the Sandinist Front, criticized the Catholic primate, Cardinal Miguel Obando y Bravo, for failing to condemn the rebels in a homily he gave this week. It said the cardinal had condemned overnment orders that exiled Bishop Vega and another prominent clergyman, the Reverend Bismarck Carballo, but said he had ignored the deaths of the 32

The bishops' reluctance to condemn rebel forces for reported acrocities and attacks on civilians has been an important element io the government's campaign against the Catholic hierarchy.

"The bishops are blind." Nucvo Diario wrote. Although the bishops normally do not speak out against killings said to have been committed by rebel groups. they frequently condemn the government for what they call its abuses of human rights. Government leaders have described them as anti-Sandinist political activists disguised as clerics.

Cardinal Obando y Bravo and Bishop Vega, who is the second-ranking Nicaraguan prelate, have said that because the Nicaraguan press is censored and because no information about military attacks can be published or broadcast without government approval, they have no way of ertaining the truth about attacks said to have been staged by the rebels. "I don't know the details of that attack," Cardinal Obando y Bravo said Thursday when asked about the deaths in San José de Bocay. "We condemn all unjust deaths. We are not in agreement with the spilling of blood, and for that we condemn all parties." Diplomats in Managua expressed varying opinions about the attack, which occurred on July 4. Some said that the government version of the incident rang true, but others said they doubted it. Spokesmen for the rebel forces, known as "contras." were not available for comment

> In the last few years, the army has planted along its border with Honduras thousands of mines intended to make it difficult for rebels based in Honduras to infiltrate into Nicaragua.

The border area has been largely cleared of civilians, but it is known that some Nicaraguan civilians have been killed by Sandinist mines. Io some border regions, farms that once produced coffee and tobacco have been abandoned because of fears that field laborers might be killed by

"It is entirely possible that the mine that blew up that truck was placed by the Sandinists, not the contras," a European diplomat

Others, however, doubted that the explosion was caused by a Sandinist mine, saying that the planting of mines by the Sandinists was confined to the border area. San José de Bocay is 25 miles (40 kilometers) from the

The Israeli Embassy spokesman, Yossi Gal, said later that the two officials had "expressed the hope the close relations between the two countries" would oot be damaged by the controversy.

Glyndebourne's 'Porgy'

"Porgy and Bess" in production at Glyndebourne: Damon Evans as Sportin' Life, Cynthio Haymon as Bess ond Willard White as Porgy.

by David Stevens

LYNDEBOURNE, England -It's a long way from Catfish Row to the Sussex Downs — a little more than half a century -but the triumphant success of the Glyn-debourne Festival Opera's production of George Gershwin's "Porgy and Bess" can be recorded as a red-letter day both in the history of Glyndebourne and for the composer's only opera.

For Glyndebourne, it is a real departure. Mozart is the patron saint of this festival, founded in 1934 by John Christie and his wife, the soprano Andrey Mildmay. Its repertory ranges from the Ba-roque to Stravinsky and Britten and there have been ventures into Verdi, including this season's new production of "Simon Boccanegra." The Glyndebourne image is aristocratic—the gem of a theater built as a wing on a stately country home, Rolls-Royces in the pasture parking lot, operalovers in evening dress picnicking on the lawn during the long intermission.

opera" about life in a black community with plenty of nothing would be anachronistic in such a setting. But Glyndebourne has a dead-serious professional image, too, compounded of generous rehearsal time, an emphasis on ensemble strength and a sense of artistic community - performers settle in here for the run of the festival; oo flitting in and out to squeeze in other

If it has taken more than 50 years for Glyndebourne to be ready for "Porgy," the reverse is also true. Gershwin began work on "Porgy" about the same time as this festival was founded, and although he knew he was writing an opera - with accompanied recitatives and roles that demand voices of real operatic size and training - he also knew that he wanted it to "appeal to the many rather than to the cultured few." So, although at one point there had been discussion of a comm from the Metropolitan, in the end it was the Theater Guild that commissioned and produced it, and its 1935 premiere was in the Alvin Theater, a Broadway house. It ran for 124 performances, certainly a respectable showing, but it lost its investment. Within two years Gershwin was dead, without having heard entirely as he conceived and wrote it or experiencing its eventual succe "Porgy and Bess" gradually acquired its popularity in the form of a Broadway musical, with spoken dialogue and many cuts, which eased the need for extensive choral rehearsals and helped make it economically viable. Serious moves in the direction of Gershwin's original musical intentions began about 25 years ago, cul-minating in the mid-1970s in Lorin Maazel's recording of the full operatic version and the Houston Grand Opera's full-scale production (albeit, with body mikes) that toured the United States and Europe. Then last year, 50 years after its premiere it reached the stage of the New York Metropolitan—although there were some complaints of excessive grandiosity.

At first, the theater and music crowds didn't know what to make of it. Some newspapers sent both their theater and music critics to the 1935 premiere, and in general it was the theater critics who praised while the music people were more reserved. But the Maszel recording, the Houston and Met productions, and now Glyndebourne have surely laid to rest the "Is it opera?" question.

Nor has "Porgy" been no rope. The celebrated touring production starring Leontyne Price and William Warfield in the early 1950s carried the word as far as Moscow (where later there were reports of a local bootleg production). The vienna Volksoper, the Bregenz Festival, the Toulouse opera, even the Budapest

State Opera were among the theaters to put or productions, with or without American blacks in the cast. Despite widely varying production values — the Hungarians had some quaint ootions about social habits in Caffish Row, like hand-kissing — "Porgy" stood up well. It would be hard to imagine a more integrated, dramatically cohesive and musically intense production than Glyndebourne's. Under British artistic direction—staged by Trevor Nunn, conducted by Simon Rattle, designed by John Gunter (sets) and Sue Blane (costumes)—and with a cast largely drawn from the United States, but also from the Caribbean and England, this is a thorough and convincing restudy of the work that strips away many of its folkloric accretions. On the small Glyndebourne stage it acquires a powerfully concentrated effect, especially in the crucial choral scenes, and each role becomes a detailed character study. The great Gershwin songs are still there, of course, but in their real context they seem to grow in musical and emotional impact. "I got plenty o' nuttin' " and the "Bess, you is my woman oow" duet grow out of their dramatic background with a lyrical ease and naturalness that a Puccini would not disdain, integral parts of a score that gains from being done uncut, as it was here — which means a good three and half hours of music.

There are practical reasons wby "Porgy and Bess" oeeded a half century to enjoy this kind of production. In 1935, black singers simply were not part of the operat-ic world. Gershwin had trouble funding the singers he wanted. Anne Brown, the original Bess, was a 22-year-old Juilliard School graduate. Todd Duncan, the origi-nal Porgy, was a music teacher in Washington, with some operatic experience in all-black companies and a solid repertory of art songs. The Met did oot hire black singers until the 1950s, bot last year was able to east important roles in its "Porgy and Bess" from its own roster - with Simon Estes and Grace Bumbry, both veterans of the Wagner Festival in Bayreuth.

Likewise, here, the all-black singing cast (the white parts are all speaking roles) is rich in operatic experience. The superb Porgy is Willard White, a Jamaican bass-. baritone who has been singing at Glynde-bourne since 1978 and is familiar io European operatic ceoters. His imposing characterization of the crippled Porgy gained in dignity through one of Nunn's departures from "tradition." Instead of a goat cart or the kind of furniture-mover's dolly that Porgy usually rolls around on, he is upright most of the time, moving painfully on two sticks, one leg dangling "trusted and nealest.

twisted and useless, Cynthia Haymon, who is scheduled to " make her Covent Garden debut as Liu in Puccini's "Turandot" oext year, was a be-guilingly lyrical Bess, and oatural and, credible dramatically. Gregg Baker was, the brutal Crown, a strapping giant physi-cally and with thunderous baritone to match; it seemed quite sensible for Porgy to start his fight to the death with Crown by clubbing him in the head from behind.

Sportin' Life, for years a role associated more with personality than voice, got plennore with personality man voice, got pren-ty of both from the tenor Damon Evans, who distributed his "happy dust" with sinuous style and the right-touch of tackiness. Harolyn Blackwell as Clara won then audience at the start with "Summertime." Cynthia Clarey as Serena and Bruce Hubbard as Jake also stood out in a large castthat was without nonceable weakness.

The sets and costumes were traditional enough. Gunter's Catfish Row is convincing as a former mansion become a rundown, ill-repaired tenement, and he elev-erly finessed the narrowness of the stage by having Porgy's room revolve to become visible or disappear as needed.

There are other reasons why Gershwin's opera has had to wait for its day. For a long time many people, and not only blacks, were upset by what they felt was an insulting portrayal of blacks by whites— Gershwin, his brother Ira, and the author DuBose Heyward. Duke Ellington called it "black on stage, white everywhere else," and the composer and music critic Virgila Thomson termed it "crooked folklore and halfway opera. None of that seems to be important now, any more than the question of what genre of musical theater it fits into. "Porsucceeds the way opera must, through the power of its music to convey the emotional impact and the essential sincerity of its story. The final curtain at Saturday's first performance — here the term "feso-val quality" means something — brought the audience to its feet cheering.

Rameau Rarity at Spoleto

By William Weaver

S POLETO, Italy — Scholars and connoisseurs of music all agree: Rameau was a very great opera composer. But somehow that knowledge doesn't seem to have reached the managements of the world's theaters. So the opportunity to hear a Rameau opera is an occasion not to miss, and the announcement that the Festival of Two Worlds was to create a new production of "Platée" immediately aroused the interest of music-lovers.

That interest was all the greater because Filippo Sanjust, who designed and staged a memorable production of Monteverdi's "Coronation of Poppea" here a few years ago, was to be responsible for the Rameau rarity.

Samuest has the enviable ability to suggest rococo elegance without cluttering the stage or encouraging his actors to exaggerated simpering and mincing. In other words, he has a sense of style. It was everywhere evident in his "Plate," which has proved one of the real successes of this 29th Spoleto festival. The farcical elements are suitably broad and simple (the rustics of the prologue have a Shakespearean honesty), the gods are elegant, the fleecy clouds of Olympus move gracefully. Rameau's music is not easy, but Sanjust was lucky to have the gifted young Mark Stringer to guide - and inspire - the equally young and gifted festival orchestra. Stringer also understands Rameau style, and while keeping a tight rein on his players, be allowed them to relish all the rich subtlety of the score, its rollicking or stately dances, its dreamy pastoral flow, its imagina-

The singers were uneven. In the travesty title role, Bruce Brewer recalled the old Hollywood star Mary Boland. But his risible acting never prevented him from singing delightfully (and the arias, for all that this work is a comedy, are as complex and demanding as those of any tragédie-lyrique). Beverly Hoch, in the important role of La Folie, revealed a clear, icy, cutting voice—a Zerbinetta voice, in other words - and she used it to telling effect. Others ranged from adequate to good.

But the real star on stage was the Westminster Choir: agile alert, always accurate and musical. It is a mainstay of the festival and allows Spoleto to program works that with the usual, bureaucratic, Italian opera-house chorus would be impossible. This was not, perhaps, a perfect performance of "Platée," but it was thanks largely to chorus and orchestra — always enjoyable, justifying the festival's faith and courage.

Vajda Turns to Dostoyevsky

Wajda quoted the line, "It's a good thing that you, sir, murdered only the old woman, because if you had thought up some worse theory, well — " The director paused a second to shed the character, then added: "Unfortunately, significantly worse theories have been invented and enacted.

It seems to me that the particular cry of Dostoyevsky was to warn us of a time that was coming — a time that is now here — when it is oot only a bizaire student who kills two old ladies to realize a point, but terrorists in almost every city who are ready to kill anyone. Wajda, who is best known in the West for his such films as "Man of Iron," "Man of Marble," "Danton" and "Love in Germany," has over the past 26 years alternated between film work and directing the Stary Theater. The two activities, he said, are as distinct as sculpture and painting. When I am in the theater, I forget that I ever directed a film, and when I am directing a film, there is nothing that I bring to it from my theater experience."

The theater production of "Crime and Punishment," first staged in 1984, is a case in point. Wajda cut back on the "Theater is for words, for beautiful, complicated words and thoughts. For a long time people have been saying that film or televi-sion would kill theater, but it has not hapson would kill ineater, but it has not nap-pened and will not happen. People will al-ways go to the theater to hear words, dialogue, speeches and ideas, which are the basis of Western theatrical traditions."

In rereading the novel — the third Dos-toyevsky work, after "The Possessed" and "The Idiot," that he has adapted for the stage — Waida determined that its heart lay not in the action of the murders but in the loog dialogues between Raskolnikov (Jerzy Radziwilowicz, who starred in "Man of Marble" and "Man of Iron") and Petrovich (Jerzy Stuhr). "At the outset, the reader knows that Raskolnikov is the murderer and for that reason 'Crime and Punishment' does not ask who killed but rather it seeks the answer of what was the motivation." he said. According to Wajda, the killing is no gratuitous act stemming from the perverse psy-action, which he said he would have stressed more in a film, and gave free rein to the long speeches of the student and prosecutor.

"Theater is for words for heaviful." exchanges he was telling us that we must look closely and learn about sin, guilt and redemption and religious ideas."

Essentially, the play consists of three long exchanges between the prosecutor and the student and three other scenes in which Raskolnikov confides his secrets to the character called Sonia. "Here I am much more intrigued by the punishment than by the crime," said Wajda.

Wajda canceled plans to accompany the theater to New York because, he said, he was tired and had not been feeling particularly healthy. At one point he said he had discussed with Joseph Papp, head of the New York Shakespeare Festival, the possibility of producing an English-language production of "Crime and Punishment" with Al Pacino, whom he envisions as the ideal Raskolnikov. whom he envisions as the ideal Raskolnikov, but this plan will have to wait.

Waida has worked in the United States before, and he recalls with satisfaction a 1974 production of "The Possessed" at the Yale Repertory Theater in which Meryl Streep performed. At Pepsico's Summerfare - the festival is offering a program of the-ater, opera, concerts, film, jazz and dance through Aug. 3 — the Krakow theater is performing in Polish, though the members of the audience can use headphones for simul-

In Poland, where cultural figures are often judged by how they behave in regard to political authority, Wajda has the respect both of the opposition and of the govern-ment's culture bureaucracy. It is a difficult position to maintain. With such films as "Man of Iron" and "Man of Marble," he sympathetically portrayed the rise of the Polish dissident labor movement, Solidarity, through the struggles of two generations of workers. Such films, and Wajda's leadership of the now suspended independent filmmak-ers' union, have made him some enemies among the more doctrinaire figures within Poland's cultural establishment. On the other hand, his international reputation has made him something of an untouchable who, though subject to criticism and reprimand, is less circumscribed in what he can do than lesser known artists.

In his most recently completed project, Wajda teamed up with Tadeusz Konwicki, Poland's best-known novelist and another relative untonchable, in producing a film adaptation of Konwicki's novel "An Accident of Love." The work, set in 1939, describes how two young people fall in love as war approaches and then begins. The film, in which Konwicki makes his acting debut, is scheduled for release at a film festival in Gdansk later this summer.

Wajda said his immediate plans were to rest as much as he could but that after the summer holidays he wants to begin directing adaptations of Isaac Bashevis Singer's novel "The Manor" for Concord films of Munich. He said the project called for the production in Poland of films based on the novel and other works by Singer for French and Ger-

Chantal Akerman: the Girl of the Golden Eighties

by Mark Hunter

ARIS — Seven years ago, Chantal Akerman, an onpishly powerful per-sonnage whom Jean Tulard's "Dictionnaire du Cinema" calls a director "for forewarned intellectuals," decided to go Hollywood. She would break with what she now calls her "very austere" past projects, like the 1975 film "Jeanne Dielman, 23

Chantal Akerman at work.

Quai du Commerce, 1080 Brussels," a classic study of a woman's crumbling daily routine; or the amorous alienation of "Les Rendez-vous d'Anna" (1978). Instead she would di-rect a dramatic epic based on Isaac Bashevis Singer's novels "The Manor" and "The Es-tate," for which she bought the rights and wrote a script, All she needed was $20 mil-lion.

Returning to Brussels in 1980, without the millions, Akerman wrote the first version of a comedy called "Golden Eighties" with the screenwriter Jean Gruault (a frequent col-laborator of François Truffaut and Alain Resnais, among other directors). At the time, she recalled, "No one thought I could do a comedy." It took a seven-minute video demo" of "Golden Eighties," using music by George Gershwin, to convince the first of two producers that the film could be made but as a musical comedy, by a director who until last month had never played an instrument or studied music.

"Golden Eighties," Akerman's 19th film in a career that began in 1968 at age 18 with a short called "Saute Ma Ville," recently opened in Paris, following its premiere at the Cannes film festival. It is a striking example of what a determined director can accomplish in an unfamiliar genre on a modest budget of 12 million francs (about $1.7 mil-

In 39 days of filming at a Paris studio made up to look like the shopping mall where most of the action of "Golden Eighties" takes place, Akerman often arrived at the set without knowing how she would choreograph her actors to create a sense of movement with the one camera her budget allowed for. She knew, however, that she wanted to break with her previous methods. 'In my other films you felt the frame" of the picture like a cage around the actors, she

Charles Denner and Delphine Seyrig in "The Golden Eighties."

Akerman's new technique matched the film's story, a kind of itinerant fable in very close quarters, which she had polished through successive drafts with the screenwriters Leora Barish, Henry Bean and Pascal Bonitzer. (And as is not always the case in Akerman's films, this time she closely fol-said. "This time, usually I picked people and followed them with the camera." lowed the script.) As the camera moves from character to character, it takes us through the intersecting romantic tangles of the peo-ple who work or pass through the mall, such as John Berry and Delphine Seyrig (she played the title role in "Jeanne Dielman"). He's Eli, the American who stops to buy a suit, and she's Jeanne, the survivor of a concentration camp whom he loved and lost after World War II, who sells him clothes in her boutique and helplessly submits to his

The model for the Seyrig character was Akerman's mother, in whose shopping-mall boutique the daughter worked during school vacations and who is a survivor of the camps.
"There's something incredible," said Akerman, "about a woman working in a shop, who smiles and shows her hand in a gesture, and you see the numbers tattooed on her hand." There is a kind of anthority in such a woman's experience, and it emerges in "Golden Fighties" when Seyrig says, to com-fort a girl from the shop across the way who has been jilted by Jeanne's son, Robert: "One day you'll meet a man who loves you, whom you love," then adds, "As long as there's enough to eat."

In the meantime Jeanne has sent Eli on his way, standing by the good man (Charles Denner) she married and built a life with; Eli has taken off with Lili (the adorably vulgar Fanny Cottencon), mistress of mall owner, Monsieur Jean, who has gone mad at the news that she betrayed him with Robert (Nicolas Tronc), who asked Mado (the secand film role of the Belgian singer Lio) to marry him but changes his mind when Lili comes back. It's precisely this combination of the frenetic, the foolish and the melan-choly that gives "Golden Eighties" its

The film relies heavily on character actors and singers: Myriam Boyer as a cafe maid reading aloud her far-off lover's letters ("Blues is crying in the sky," runs one wistful line), Berry as the middle-aged lover insisting that "everything is still possible," and the marvelous discovery Pascale Salkin as Lio's broken-hearted best friend, musing about making love in the film's major production number, "Il Pleut" (It's Raining).

When these people sing, it is to step out of the daily hustle into fantasies like the "one little accident" that would free Robert to spend "all day and night in bed with Lili."
An a capella quartet of greasers comments and according to perfect "50s doo-wop style one of several conventions, from the romantic string quartet to the classic varieté ballad, employed by the Belgian composer Marc Herouet to frame Akerman's unconvention-al lyrics. The musical styles are fitted to the characters and the characters to the setting, recognizable people caught in an enclosed

"Golden Eighties," like the more operatic movie musicals of the French director Jacques Demy, achieves a personal blend of realism and stylization. It is unlike either the Broadway-influenced Hollywood musicals of Vincente Minnelli or the low-life populism of such soundtrack dramas as "Saturday Night Fever." Instead, Akerman has made a kind of intimist musical, a seeming contradiction in terms — what could be more expansive than music, which fills the space around its source?

"Golden Eighties" uses its physical constraints as an understated theme; the characters toke about it, but they are well aware of the money, space, and love they lack.

"I'm gentle with the characters," Akerman said, "but the situations are cruel. It's more violent to treat serious things in a light way.

"When I wrote the script," she added, "that was all unconscious. People say I'm an intellectual, and it's false. I don't have an intellectual method when I make a film. I put trust in what I feel, and ask myself why I feel

Time of Donatello." The Detroit Institute of Donatello." The Detroit Institute of the Ford Madonna and the Nativity to this 600th anniversary exhibited of the Florentine sculptor.

Tworks have been loaned by major arms around the world. aums around the world.

The only documented Donatello relief, the Chellini Madonna, is also in the show. Given by the artist to a Florentine doctor in 1456 and sold by the family three centuries later to an English nobleman, the masterpiece languished for another 300 years in a series of English country homes until it was acquired by the Victoria and Albert Museum in 1976. Its showing in Florence is regarded as a brief, happy homecoming.

Centennial fever has flushed a "new"

Donatello out of the Florentine woodwork, The Madonna della Murate was hidden away in the chapel of Le Murate, a Florence prison formerly a convent for muns of noble family. When a new prison was built recently in the suburbs and the old structure vacated, studiosi rushed in for a look at the contents. The exquisite marble relief of the Madorma and Child was quickly claimed as a late (1457) work of Donatello by Giorgio Bon-santi, the co-curator, along with Detroit's Alan Phipps Darr, of the show at the Forte Belvedere. The attribution was based on its similarity to the Donatello tondo in the Siena cathedral, but is not without opposition by other Florentine art historians. Original ly, the Rensissance chronicler Giorgio Vasan said the work was by Desiderio da Settignano, whose fetching bambini most resemble those of Donatello.

As well as the new attributions, there are the restorations, particularly the gilded bronze bust of San Rossore on loan from the Museo Nazionale di San Matteo in Pisa. Although it is a reliquery that once contained the head of a Christian martyr, it is often considered the first portrait-bust of the Renaissance. There is also the restored polychrome wood statue of San Girolamo. More obvious is Donatello's penitent Maddalena with rice paper temporarily bandaging her feet, a sure sign of restoration work in pro-

Perhaps the most dramatic feature is the showing of four major Crucificions of the Florentine Renaissance together for the first time. According to Vasari, the first (1408-10) by Donatello was criticized by Brunelleschi for having the body of a peasant. Whereupon the younger sculptor challenged his friend to do better. When Donatello finally saw the cool classic beauty of Brunelleschi's Crucifixion, he dropped everything, includ-ing the apron of eggs he had for their dinner. As well as these two legendary works, there is one by Michelozzo (1435-40) and a later one (1450) attributed to Donatello. They represent the evolution in his lifetime from the late Gothic to the full Renaissance styles.

The Maddalena was not an isolated subject in art history. In fact, its long traverse between the sacred and the profane is the subject of a most original exhibition in the Susan Sala Bianca of the Pitti Palace. The iconographical journey begins with Giotto and graphical journey begins with Ghotto and ends with Giorgio de Chirico — all quite triumphantly in the interpretation of the curator Marilena Mosco.

More than any other literary or artistic figure, the Maddalena — Mary Magdalene — represents the traditional ambiguity about the identity of women in Italian society. Yet, the Maddalena's personality was obscure even in its New Testament origins. Whether she was the harlot who dried Christ's feet with her hair, or the sister of Martha or the follower of Christ, or all in one, is uncertain. What is clearer is that she was isolated from patriarchal Hebrew society for her actions and became a Christian nbol and saint for abandoned women and

Like the seven sins of the Biblical Maddalena, the Pitti show is divided into seven sections illustrating all her images from penitence to eestacy. Pictorically, the Maddalena's modern evolution begins with Pietro Lorenzetti in the 14th century who was the first to give her the red robes of passion. Previously, the Maddalena was usually iden-tified by her long hair covering her emaciated body like a cloak. By the 16th century, she had become voluptuous and ecstatic particularly in the works of Titian, Tintoretto, Si-mon Vouet and Abraham Bloemaert.

The last of the 134 works of art is a delightfully irreverent ink drawing by the 20th century Rome artist Gino Bonichi. Entitled "La Messa delle Maddalene" (1931), it shows a church full of modern Rome courte-sans praying, in their own fashion, and offering alms to a nervous priest.

The Silver of Byzantium

ALTIMORE — Our visual knowledge of the art of the distant past has expanded dramatically in this century as a result of countless chance finds and illicit digs that have yielded hundreds of thousands of works of art. Unfortmately, such digs also mean untold destruction — scattering the evidence provided by the archaeological context, physically destroying many frugile artifacts such as tex-tiles and ivories, which the diggers are ill-equipped to handle, and seriously distorting our perception of history.

An unusual exhibition at the Walters Art Gallery on the occasion of the 17th International Byzantine Congress, which is sched-uled for the United States for the first time

SOUREN MELIKIAN

Aug. 3-8, gives unprecedented insight into what such digs and so-called accidental finds can do to entire aspects of an ancient culture - though that is not the direct purpose of the show. "Silver From Early Byzantium: The Kaper Koraon and Related Treasures" through Aug. 17) puts side by side for the first time the chalices, patens, ewers and other objects, used in the celebration of Eastern Christian liturgy, that were supposedly found in four different "treasures" in about 1010 in parkhars. about 1910 in northern Syria.

The names of the places with which each find was associated by the dealers who sold the items - Stuma and Riha, two small villages west of Aleppo; the city of Hama; and Antioch, the metropolis of Syrian Christianity — have become embedded in the history of what is called Byzantine art. The guest curator of the exhibition, Marlia Mun-dell Mango, who wrote the catalog as a scholarly essay, has gone over the evidence relating to the connection between each treasure and its supposed location. She compares testimonies, digs up virtually every mention in scholarly literature and mostly unpublished private correspondence, and carefully traces as many descendants of the dramatis personae as possible.

At the end of an analysis so bristling with detail that it takes several careful readings before one begins to feel at home with the subject, it becomes fairly clear that the associations between the treasures and their alleged origins have little more to substantiate them than each vendor's word. Largely by matching objects, Mundell Mango convincingly argues that the "Riha Treasure," of which the greater part landed in Washington; the "Stuma Treasure," of which four pieces entered the Istanbul Archaeological Museum in February 1908; the "Hama Treasure," now mostly in the Walters gallery; and the "Antioch Treasure," of which the better part found its way into the Metropoli-tan Museum of Art in New York, were all part of a single find, Her thesis is that it came to light in the present-day village Kurin, close to Sinna and Riha — the ancient Kaper Koraon, as the name appears on sev-

the reservations expressed by the writer herself in her conclusion.

Whether other specialists concur or not, the importance of the exhibition and accompanying essay is that they expose the sloopi-ness so often displayed by art historians whose primary material comes from unrecorded digs via the art market: They accept hearsay as fact. Still more important to an understanding of early cultures is the picture of Syrian art that emerges from the exhibition. Every line in the catalog and every item in the show prove the consistency and originality of the silversmith's art in Syria, the greatest in the East outside Iran in the period preceding the advent of Islam in the seventh

The shapes are characterized by what could be called calligraphic simplicity. The sixth-century chalices are typical. They are constructed like broad bowls with walls curving slightly inward at the top, resting on trumpet-shaped stands, often with com-pressed knobs breaking up the trumpet shape. This is an Eastern type of construc-tion that can be traced to much earlier times. In profile, the bowls, which clearly existed as free-standing types, are unlike anything known from the Greek territories of the Byzantine empire. The bold use of bands of inscription on otherwise undecorated vessels, emphasizing the purity of the forms, is equally typical of the Syrian silversmith's

This is not to say that Syrian silversmiths rejected figurative art. Two patens, one lent by Istanbul and the other by the Dumbarton Oaks collection in Washington, are covered with scenes of the Communion of the Apostles (the Last Supper) in low relief. They are done in very different styles, though Mureral objects. Gary Vikan, the Byzantine scholar whose idea it was to hold such an exhibition and who edited Mundell Mango's text, accepts her argument without any of

The Istanbul piece is astonishing in its anticipation of some trends of Western medieval art. The dancing movement of some of the figures, as well as their elongation, recurs in early Romanesque bas reliefs in southern France — Toulouse, among other places.
The Dumbarton Oaks paten is in a figurative style that comes close to the styles known from Byzantine art of undoubted Greek manufacture, without really resembling any

A third style is illustrated by the famous Louvre museum vase, or ewer, as Mundell Mango characterizes it. It was found in the ruins of a Syrian village church, but is usually referred to as the Homs vase. The author notes the many features, technical and stylis-tic, that it shares with other silver pieces found in Syria, and wrily observes that it "is often attributed to Constantinople because of its superior quality."

The conclusion that springs to mind which Mundell Mango does not formulate, perhaps out of courtesy to the members of the Byzantine Congress — is that the word "Byzantine" applied to such art is misleading. At best it describes the political domination of Christianized Greece over a Semitic country that spoke Syriac - then the vernacular of most of the Semitic Near East, in-cluding Palestine — and used Greek for scientific or ceremonial purposes only, much as medieval Europe used Latin. At worst, it is a complete misnomer, with its ambiguous connotation suggesting Greek art and cul-

The architecture of Syria at this period is strikingly different from that of Greece, The basilica at Qalat Sam'an does not remotely resemble anything Greek, nor do any of the northern Syrian churches admirably analyzed half a century ago by the French scholar Jean Lassus in his monumental study (long out of print) "Les Eglises de la Syrie du Nord." Yet they too continue to be featured in books on "Byzantine art."

Even such remarkable achievements as the Baltimore show and its catalog essay may not be enough to change deeply ingrained beliefs, inherited from the European past, that Greece was the center of the ancient

Using the National Gallery show as a an appetizer, one may embark on a feast of Old Master shows in London. Matthiesen has mounted its third show of the Baroque, with an excellent catalog sold in aid of the National Art-Collections Fund. Among the 34 works, the Italian masters of the Baroque are fully represented -- Giovanni Benedetto Castiglione (1609-65) with "Journey of Abraham and his Family into Canaan"; Salvator Rosa (1615-73) with "A Beggars' Encamp-ment" and a "Scene of Witchcraft" painted on slate, similar in theme to that recently acquired for the National Gallery from the Althorp Collection; Giovanni Lanfranco (1582-1647) with "The Rest on the Flight" (into Egypt), a tight, comparatively early work; and Mattia Preti (1613-99) with "David Playing the Harp Before Saul," a large work recently rediscovered in an Argentin-

It is among other than the prime masters, however, that one finds some of the most exciting works in the show - notably "Re-becca and Eliezer at the Well" by Carlo becca and Ehezer at the Weil" by Cano Mararta (1625-1713), papal portraitist and from 1664 principal of the Academy of St. Luke in Rome; and the tremendously power-ful "Death of Cleopatra" by the archetypal feminist Artemisia Gentileschi (1593-1662/3) interpational traveler, intellectual 1652/3), international traveler, intellectual (among her lively letters are several to Galileo) and painter of genius. "Baroque III, 1620-1700," Matthlesen Fine Art, 7/8 Mason's Yard, Duke Street, St. James's, SWI, through Aug. 15.

Salvator Rosa is among 44 artists in a show of Old Master drawings at Colnaghi's, but though the majority are Italian they are mostly pre- or post-Baroque. Notable among the early works is a rare pen, ink and wash drawing of Apollo driving the chariot of the sun by Lelio Orsi da Novellara (1511-87), similar in theme to one in the royal collection at Windsor, and a superb "Adora-tion of the Shepherds" by Annibale Carracci

Among the non-Italian works are a pair of designs for chapel decorations by the Span-iard Sebastian de Herrera Barnuevo (1619-71) and a chalk, ink and wash drawing of "The Way to Calvary," one of three prepara-tory sketches by Jacob Jordaens (1593-1678) for his alterpiece in the church of St. Francis Xavier, Antwerp. Among post-Baroque works is a master drawing of a vase by Giovanni-Baptista Piranesi (1720-88).

Colnaghi's has been a printseller since 1760; in an event independent of the drawings show is its annual exhibition of master prints, in which Piranesi the etcher is represented by eight architectural works. The show of 142 exhibits is remarkable for including the complete set of 62 etchings by Rosa, in addition to seven individual items. from the Duke of Devonshire's collection at Chatsworth. Among the individual Chatsworth prints are "The Comacan Sibyl, after Raphael" by the Rome printmaker Agostino Veneziano (fl. 1516-36) and what must be the first recorded boxing print, "Entellus and Dares" including in fisticulfs, by the early 16th-century artist Marco Dente da

Vill Dow Jones's Plunge rag Down U.S. Economy?

By LEONARD SILK New York Times Service

TEW YORK - This week's sharp break in the stock market has aroused anxieties that the U.S. economy is weakening. With so much money riding on stocks, economists fear that a market plunge might stifle the "mive wealth effect" - that is, the drag created by the drop in e of stock holdings.

U.S. Cites Drop For 6 Months

WASHINGTON - U.S. whole-June to finish the first half of the year 6.5 percent lower, at an annual rate, than they were at the end of 1985, the Labor Department said

Friday.

Analysts with the Bureau of Labor Statistics, which prepared the monthly statistical report, said the six-month decline was the steepest since 1949. All figures were seasonally adjusted.

The flat inflation rate m June came as a surprise to most observ-ers, who had anticipated a continu-ation of the modest inflationary pace set in May, when wholesale prices rose by 0.6 percent. The wholesale price of gasoline, which fell rapidly in the first four months of the year, rose 2.9 percent after a revised 8.6-percent rise in May as motorists took to the highways for summer vacations. Service station operators still paid 33.5 percent less for gas in June than they did in June 1985, the analysts said.

Wholesale food prices remained flat for the month, with a 9.8-percent drop in the cost of fresh and dried vegetables paired with more moderate declines in eggs, rice, beef, veal and soft drinks.

These gains were offset, however, by an 18.2-percent jump in fish prices, a 3-percent increase in poultry prices and a 5.2-percent increase in pork prices.

Producer prices overall at the end of June were 1.7 percent lower than they were at the end of June 1985, analysts said.

In another report, the government announced that private housing units were completed at an adted annual rate of 1.814 million in May, up 8 percent from the re-vised April rate of 1.683 million. It was the quickest pace of housing completions since December 1979. Residential units in buildings with five or more units accounted for most of the increase.

Banking Loses Its WASPish Look

Competition Breaks Down Some Barriers in U.S.

By Robert A. Bennett

New York Times Service NEW YORK - On a snowy Christmas Eve in 1969, Boris S. Berkovitch was summoned to Gov-ernor Nelson A. Rockefeller's residence and of-fered the job of New York state superintendent of banks - a post that would have made him watchdog over the biggest and most powerful banks in the United States. No Jewish person had ever held

But Mr. Berkovitch declined the offer. He was doing well as an executive at Morgan Guaranty Trust Co. and the superintendent's post, while prestigious, was essentially a political appointment that would have taken him outside the mainstream of American banking. At 48, he decided to press on at Morgan, although the big bank had no Jews in its upper management.

His decision paid off, for in 1983 he reached the lofty post of vice chairman and member of Morgan's four-person Corporate Office, which runs the company. "I did not see it as a gamble or think about it that much; I assumed that if they hired me, my being Jewish didn't matter to them either," said Mr. Berkovitch, who retired in March at age 65. But he acknowledged that in the past, "banking was characterized by an absence of Jews, especially at the managerial level,"

The experience of Mr. Berkovitch is becoming commonplace. Although white Anglo-Saxon Protestants still dominate top management at America's dozen or so largest commercial banks, it is no longer their exclusive preserve. Not only Jews but other ethnic Americans are moving into the upper echelons in rising numbers.

"Commercial banks had been quite WASPish, but I would be very surprised if you find much ethnic bias in 1986," said Samuel L. Hayes 3d, professor of investment banking at Harvard Business School. Muriel Siebert, a former New York State superintendent of banks, agreed. "The numbers indicate there was some kind of discriminatory policy, deliberate or not," she said, "but now the banks are really trying."

The recent evidence of change near the top is dramatic. Last September, for example, Citicorp put Lawrence M. Small, who is Jewish, in charge of its biggest operating division, which deals with corporations, government and other financial in-stitutions. Robert I. Lipp, also Jewish, became one of Chemical Bank's three presidents in 1983.

Anthony P. Terracciano, whose grandfather came to the United States from Italy, became vice chairman of Chase Manhattan Bank last year, and Peter C. Palmieri, also of Italian descent, was made vice chairman of Irving Trust Co. in 1984. In December, Manufacturers Hanover Trust Co. appointed two Jews to executive vice presidencies. And Ira Stepanian, of Armenian descent, is expected to move up from president to chairman of the Bank of Boston — an institution traditionally run by men from long-established New England families.

Among the big banks, however, there are still very few blacks, Hispanics or women among top

It is difficult to assess the process taking place. By and large, those making the promotion decisions are reluctant to discuss the subject in any detail, as are the ethnic Americans benefiting from See BANKS, Page 15

FRANKFURT - A senior Bundesbank official said Friday that the central bank sees no immeinterest rates, despite Thursday's half-point trimming of the U.S. discount rate, to 6 percent.

Claus Kohler, a member of the Bundesbank's policy-making council, said: "What would a reduction ing that its policies help boost of interest rates bring us if we're growth in the economies of its mamaximum growth potential this year of 3.5 percent?"

Mr. Kohler's remarks mirrored statements made last marks and the properties of their cooperation in cutting the U.S. trade deficit.

The Bundesbank last cut its discount rate, the safe last cut its discount rate.

statements made last week by the Bundesbank president, Karl Otto Pohl, that the German central bank sees no need to respond in kind to a U.S. rate cut, despite heavy U.S. lobbying to follow suit.

Washington has been trying to persuade the Bundesbank, as well as the Bank of Japan, to cut interest rates and thereby spur domestic demand in those countries for foreign goods. Mr. Kohler said that those in Washington "who may be disap-pointed in our unwillingness to cut rates at the moment can only be disappointed if, in fact, they believe our economy will not reach 3.5percent growth on the year, but that's not going to be the case in our current view."

tions for West German growth downward to 3 percent or less for quarter against fourth quarter

Brendan Brown, chief international economist at County Bank Ltd. in London, said: "German diate need to cut West German growth is probably going to be interest rates, despite Thursday's nearer 2.5 percent than 3 percent for the year because of what is happening on the external side as a result of the softer dollar."

The Reagan administration, feel-using Treasury bills as collateral, on March 6 of this year, to 3.5 percent from 4 percent. That cut was made in a move coordinated with the United States and Japan.

Sources within the Bundesbank and analysts indicated that a meeting of the Bundesbank's policy-making council on Aug. 14 could focus on a cut in the discount rate.

Although no Bundesbank execu-tive is willing to say so officially, what could push the bank toward a rate cut is the dollar's potential to lose more ground against the mark, making West German exports less competitive in foreign markets.

The dollar was fixed in Frankour current view."

A number of private economists, however, have revised their projecthat the U.S. discount-rate cut appeared to have put little downward pressure on the dollar, having been 1985. The economy contracted a anticipated by the market for sever full percentage point in the first al weeks.

Despite Strengthening of Yen, Japan Also Rules Out Rate Cut

The Associated Press

TOKYO — Japan has no plans to follow the United States immediately in cutting its discount rate again, according to Japanese finance officials. "Japan has already reduced the rate to the lowest level among the developed nations," the Bank of Japan's governor, Satoshi Sumita, said at a news conference Thursday. "The country's domestic economy has loosened enough and we are not considering another cut." But many economists believe Japan eventually will have to cut its 3.5-percent discount rate to keep the yen from appreciating further against the dollar, which could fur-ther harm Japanese exporters.

The U.S. Federal Reserve on Thursday lowered its discount rate, the interest on loans to commercial banks and financial institutions. from 6.5 percent to 6 percent, the lowest in more than eight years.

U.S. officials had hoped to coordinate the cut with similar actions in Japan and West Germany, to keep the value of the dollar from falling sharply. Lower interest rates reduce the returns on dollar-denominated investments, and a coordinated rate cut generally is viewed as a way of preventing a dollar tailspin.

Analysts Expect Dart To Break Up Safeway

WASHINGTON — Dart Group Corp. will have to break up Safeway Stores Inc. if it is successful in its $3.6-billion quest to buy the largest U.S. supermarket chain, according to largest U.S. supermarket chain, according to industry experts.

If the bid succeeds, the most likely candidates for the auction block are Safeway's operations in Britain and Canada, analysts said Thursday. Its foreign operations accounted for $4.3 billion of Safeway's sales of $19.6 billion last year.

Dart Group, owned by the Herbert H. Haft family of Washington, said Wednesday that it would pay $58 a share for all of Safeway's 61.1 million outstanding shares. "I think we might be witnessing the end of Safeway's empire," said Kurt Barnard, publisher of Barnard's Retail Marketing Report.

"For the Hafts to do this deal, they're going to have to sell the foreign operations," said Jonathan H. Ziegler, an analyst with the brokerage firm of Sutro & Co. in San Francisco.

Mr. Ziegler estimated that Dart Group, which probably would be taking on an additional debt of about $240 million a year in interest expenses to finance the Safeway purchase, could sell the operations in Canada, Britain and Australia for about $2 billion—about half the entire purchase price for the

By Geraldine Fabrikant New York Times Service

NEW YORK -As the producer of such highly acclaimed films as "Charious of Fire" and "The Killing Fields," David Puttnam has one of the best reputations in Hollywood.

But will the British producer, newly hired as chairman of Columbia Pictures, be the right man to see that the studio recovers from a string of box office disappointments? Under Frank Price, Columbia developed such hits as "Tootsie," "Ghostbusters" and "The Karate Kid," but since his departure, it has not produced a comparably successful state of films.

Typically, when a studio is in such a difficult spot it picks a new chief executive whose background is mass-market programming in television. That approach paid off for Columbia when it hired Mr. Price and for Warner Brothers in recruiting Robert Daly.

Columbia, however, is betting that Mr. Puttnam can use the same hands-on skills that enabled him to produce a collection of sophisticated movies to oversee production of a wider range of films. Mr. Puttnam is not the first independent producer to be hired to head a major studio, but most of those who have been chosen in the past have records of turning out more mainstream, commercially popular fare.

While his films have been critically acclaimed and profitable, they are not in the box-office league of such films as "The Karate Kid" and the "Rocky" series, pictures that have grossed more than $100 million each Hollywood has depended heavily on such mega-hits, often with big-name stars, to survive. The profits from a single big hit, such as "Beverly Hills Cop," can offset the losses from several flops — and, indeed, 7 out of 10 Hollywood films lose money.

But Mr. Puttnam himself has frequently expressed his dislike for much of the mass-market Ameri-can cinema. And he thinks he can run a profitable studio without resorting to the "me-tooism" of for-mula films with endless sequels.

In Hollywood his appointment has touched off a debate over whether he can give Columbia Pictures, the motion-picture division of Columbia Pictures Industries, the lift it needs. One top Hollywood executive said: "It is only a matter of time before David's ideas change, or I believe he will fail. The job of a producer is to make the best-quality film one can. The job of a studio head is to feed its distribution sys-The executive added: "David here; it just looks like Mitch is once again looking for his freedom."

In a brief telephone interview,

Mr. Kapor laughed off any com-parisons between his own resignation and Mr. Jobs's stormy departure from Apple a year ago. "When Steve left Apple, he didn't remain a director and a consultant," Mr. Kapor said, noting he was retaining both roles.

Neither analysts nor company insiders expect major changes at tion. With than two million users of 1-2-3, Symphony and Jazz, the company's main products, experts say the enterprise has grown so large that its fortunes no longer rise

U.K. Inflation At 20-Year Low

LONDON - Britain's annnal inflation rate has dipped to the lowest level for almost 20 years, falling to 2.5 percent in June, government figures showed Friday.

The retail price index fell 0.1 percent in June, reducing the rate for 12 months from the 2.8 ercent recorded in May.

The June figure, the lowest since November 1967, when inflation stood at 2 percent, was helped by lower home loans. Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's government has made curbing inflation the main plank of its economic strategy since it came to power in 1979. The result, critics say, has been a sharp rise in the memployment rate, now at 13.7 percent.

There are also concerns about the aging business cycle and the danger that there will be a major default by one or more Third World debtor countries. Finally, many worry that monetary policy will tighten to check the threat of inflation which will stem from the falling dollar and a recovery in oil

On balance, however, the large majority of economists are holding to their cantiously optimistic view.

Canada's Jobless Rate Falls

As commercial banks move increasingly into investment banking, they must compete for the peo-ple that Wall Street lures with high salaries and commissions. Until the mid-1970s, according to Mr. Domboff, the California professor, investment bouses were divided between Jewish and non-Jewish firms. In 1935, with his wife, Marion, Merriman went to Moscow on a scholarship to study the Soviet system. Residence in Moscow and travel in Eastern Europe did not convert Merriman to communism but did make him acutely aware of the growing strength and influence of the Fascist powers. Spain seemed to him, as to so many others, a place where Fascism might be given a decisive setback. Leaving his wife in Moscow, he went to Spain to offer his services. Since he held a reserve commission in the U.S. Army, he was appointed second in command of the newly formed Lincoln Battalion. Just before the battalion went into action, its commander had to be removed as incompetent; Merriman was in command when the Americans played their part in the costly Jarama battles that blocked Franco's attempt to cut Madrid's lifeline to Valencia. They suffered heavy losses in what Ernest Hemingway later called an "idiotic, stupidly conceived and insanely executed attack in the hills above the Jarama River"; Merriman vigorously protested the orders from brigade headquarters but was overruled and went forward at the head of his men. When the battalion was withdrawn, there were 137 dead and almost 200 wounded, Merriman among the latter.

Later that year, recovered from his wound and named chief of staff of the brigade, he was with the battalion in the bitter lighting at Belchite in Aragon. In March 1938, the Nationalists, reinforced by Italian regulars and equipped with German artillery and planes, broke through the Republican front to reach the Mediterranean and cut the territory of the Republic into two zones. The Lincoln Battalion ight stubbornly but it was overrun and surround-Merriman was never heard from again

This book, written by his widow in collaboration with a Pulitzer Prize-winning journalist, is an ac-count of Merriman's short life, based on her memories and diaries, on the battle diaries of her husband (which, with some presentiment, he had handed over to her the last time she saw him alive) and on news dispatches (those of Hemingway to The New York Times, for example) and accounts by surviv-ing members of the Lincoln Battalion. It is a striking portrait of an intellectual who displayed exemplary courage and a talent for command.

The book also tells the story of Marion. She did not stay in Moscow for long; when she received a cable, two months after her husband's departure — Wounded; come at once" - she made her way to Spain in spite of the refusal of one-time friends at the U.S. Embassy in Paris to help her, and joined her husband at the hospital in Murcia. Once there she insisted on staying and was enrolled as a volunteer in the XVth Brigade with administrative duties.

She saw Madrid under bombardment and the corpses stacked in the ruined houses of Belchite; she gives vivid accounts of Hemingway and John Dos Passos in Madrid and of life in the brigade hospitals and training centers. Later, sent to the United States to help raise money for ambulances (the only form of aid to the Republicans permitted under U. S. regulations) she heard the news that her husband was missing in action.

Eventually she married again, raised three sons and specked in administration at Stanford University and worked in administration at Stanford University. When her second husband died she found herself at last able to write this moving book, which John Kenneth Galbraith, Merriman's fellow student at Berkeley, has called "the story of the life and death of the first hero of World War IL"

Bernard Knox, who fought in the French Battalion of the XIth International Brigade at Madrid, wrote this review for The Washington Post.

With 2 Out in 12th, Red Sox Stroll to Victory Over Angels

BOSTON - A dropped fly, a bad throw and a wrong move by a pitcher whn oever pitched — and Dwight Evans strolled home with the winning run. Thursday night's game between the American League's division leaders ended in the 12th inning with a balk by pitcher Todd Fischer giving the Boston Red Sox an 8-7 victory over the California Angels. The Red Sox undid a three-run rally by the Angels in the top of the 12th by scoring three normal-looking runs and one that surprised even themselves. "I guess stranger things have happened in baseball, but I can't lain this," said Rich Gedman, who tied the score at 7 with a twoout single in the 12th.

Twelve pitchers were used in the game, though the 12th, Fischer, never threw a pitch.

The normal part: the Red Sox trailed, 3-1, after three innings, then went ahead, 4-3, in the sixth. The Angels tied in the eighth and it went into extra imnings.

Steve Crawford, Boston pitcher No. 4, got the first two batters out in the top of the 12th, but hart his shoulder and left the game.

Pitcher No. 5, Mike Brown, was allowed as many pitches as he wanted to warm up, but apparently not as many as he needed. Wally Soyner tripled on his second pitch and the third was a wild throw on which Joyner scored. Two walks, a single and a double

Eight pitchers were chosen for the American League, which has lost 13 of the last 14 games, and 10 for the National League. Clemens, a right-hander who has the most victories in the major leagues this season, was off to a 14-0 start, one victory short of the AL record, before losing his last two. Gooden, 10-4, who won the 1985 Cy Young Award in the National League with a 24-4 record, has split his last four decisions.

Système U's Guimard: A Magic Man on Tour

By Samuel Abt

NANTES, France - The man who winning the Tour de France sped into Nantes in his native Brittany on Friday, riding in a car. His name is Cyrille Guimard, he manages the Système U team and he wears an oversize grin these days.

And, as Casey Stengel of baseball fame used to say, he couldn't do it without the players.

First among them is Laurent Fig-non, who won the Tour de France in 1983 and 1984, the only two other years he competed in the world's greatest bicycle race. Figuon could not compete in last year's race because of surgery for tendinitis in his left heel. Proof that he is recovering strongly is his fifth place in the overall stand-(204-kilometer) run from St. Hilaire du Harconet to Nantes over flat country.

The stage was won in a gang sprint by Eddy Planckaert of Belgium, who rides for the Panasonic team. He finished in 4 hours 39 minutes 55 seconds. Just behind was a teammate, Eric Vanderacrden of Belgium, with compatriot Josef Lieckens of the Joker team third. Except for Greg LeMond of the United States, who finished 13th in the same time as Planckaert, team leaders stayed out of the sprint, fearing a fall or bumping before the individual time trial Saturday that will be the first real

"I feel real strong," said LeMond, who rides for La Vie Claire. "The ques-tion is how strong everybody else is." The Système U team feels strong. Guimard has five "ers in the top 10 of the 191 still competing in the race.

One reason for the proliferation of Système U riders among the leaders was their unexpected success in the team time trial last Sunday. Before the race began, it was generally agreed that Fignon's weak point was his teammates. This is a vital factor in a long race, where a leader occds helpers to draw him along in their slipstream, to set a pace for him, to offer him their wheel if his is punctured and to chase down an opponent's breakaway by forcing the ck to increase its speed.

But if others were worried about

The saddle was declared legal ruling that was protested and upheld even if the saddle has since been banned, pending study. All the riders will be mounted on standard saddles Saturday in the time trial, where they will try to take the overall leader's yellow jersey away from Jorgen Pedersen, a Dane with the Carrera team.

Since he retired from a middlingcareer as a professional racer and be-Figuon's entourage, he was not.

in one, to win the seconds that moved him ahead of Marie and into the yellow jersey. At best this was mean-spirited, at worst it was treacherous. Sensing that his many young olders might be split by their desire for the jersey and glory, Guimard dictated that Système U yield the race leadership the next morning. He made that decision even though the race was approaching Brittany, where the team's corporate sponsor, a chain of supermarkets, is widespread. The publicity value would have been vast, except that for Guimard the goal was oot to sell groceries but, as always, to win the big race.

Catskills Tummling

By Samuel G. Freedman New York Times Service COUTH FALLSBURG, New York - It is lunchtime at the working the dining room. "How are you, darling?" he asks a woman who just took his dance class. "You did a wonderful chicken." In walks Frank's partner, an exercise and positive-thinking guru named High Voltage, sort of Nor-man Vincent Peale's brain in Tina Turner's body. She wears a magen-ta body stocking, lime leg warmers and silver booties that look vaguely Martian.

"Is your energy up?" she demands of a group of women wearing T-shirts commemorating the 65th anniversary of their husbands'

lodge.
"Honey," one of them responds. "my energy's always up. I have to take medication to keep it down." Barry Frank and High Voltage together carry on one of the most venerable traditions in the Catskills. They are tummiers.

A tummler — derived from "tuml," the Yiddish word for ooise is the hyperkinetic combination of entertainer, social director, merrymaker and matchmaker whose mission, as Leo Rosten wrote in "The Joys of Yiddish," is "to guarantee to the hlase (but insatiable) patrons of a summer resort that most dubious of vacatioo boons: Never a dull moment."

Decades ago, before Club Med and Disneyland, when today's Catskill castles were glorified dairy farms, nummlers were legion. But things have changed in the Catskills. Hotels book name performers rather than developing their own

At the Raleigh, however, the tummler remains. Frank, the Brooklyn-born son of a hosiery salesman, represents the classic tummler. He wears a gold chai charm, sings an Al Jolson medley and asserts, "I never played any dumps." Voltage, with her rap soogs and aerobics classes, puts a distinctly 1980s stamp on the profession. She is believed to be the first tummler with a blond Mohawk haircut. Frank learned his trade from people with names like Jackie Phillips and Billy Hodes, who taught him how to run a bingo game, how to introduce an act, how to coax the recalcitrant onto the dance floor.

And Frank, in turn, initiated Voltage into the Catskills and tumm-

Voltage's world had been Man-Raleigh Hotel, and Barry Frank is hattan — talk shows, press kits, teaching aerobics at the Excelsion Club, partying at the Saint.

In a sense, Voltage and Frank form perfect partners, their approaches and styles so separate they share oothing but a certain mutual respect. Voltage is a vegetarian who says she eschews all things white — "sugar, salt, flour, coke." Frank, a man with a taste for kreplach, sighs, "Chuhby is beautiful."

When Voltage leads a nature hike, it is an "energy walk." When she teaches an exercise class, it is an "energy concert." When she gives a pep talk it is a "zap rap."
Frank is less the exhorter, more the convincer. He teaches a dance class beside the pool, instructing on the fine points of the skate, the limbo and the Suzy-Q. He leads sing-alongs and lawn games, ems two shows a night on weekends, and does his own act during the week. His theme song is "The

He roams the dining room, dispensing comments and quips like a waiter dropping off relish trays. "This must be the healthy table, everybody has salads," or "He's a vice principal. He's in charge of all the vice in his school."

At first Frank wondered how he and Voltage would work together. He oo longer does. "The reason I like Voltage," he said, "is that she makes me feel normal."

But they are headed in different directions. Voltage, like so many tummlers before her, sees the Catskills as a jumping-off point. In her 30s, that still seems possible. She already has a theme song and an accompanying video in production, and she drops names from Gloria Steinem to the rap singer Kurtis

Frank, though, has seen his moments come and go. He is 55 years old now, and he sounds uncharacteristically wistful as he sits beside the Raleigh's pool and mentions a few songs he recorded in the 1950s, songs, he said, that became hits for other performers. "I think that's why I ended up doing this," he said.
"I said, 'I'm ured of trying to make it.' I decided it was time to come back, to do something I loved."

Yoko Matsuo's 'Flowing' Baton

By Christine Chapman

OKYO - "Only a few women want to be conductors," said Tokyo — "Only a lew women want to be conductors, sand Yoko Matsuo, Japan's only internationally known woman conductor of classical music. "Pianists and violinists look pretty and feminine. Conductors need more muscle so they are seen as masculine. Generally, an orchestra prefers a male conductor. Japanese men do oot like to be ordered by wom-

At 33, Yoko Matsuo is not complaining. In 1982, when she was 29, she shared first prize in the international competition for young conductors in Besançon, France. She was only the second Japanese to gain the honor, after Seiji Ozawa in 1959, and the second woman, after the French conductor Catherine Comet in

Since winning the award, Matsuo has conducted major Japaoese orchestras, becoming a regular teacher of conducting at the Tokyo University of Fine Arts and Music, and a public person-ality, appearing on television and radio talk shows.

As she said: "Before the competition, there was not much work for me as a woman conductor. After, the men said I was 'unique' and began to offer me jobs."

In March 1983, she made her Japanese debut leading the To-kyo Symphony Orchestra in a program of French music. Since then, she has conducted the NHK Symphooy Orchestra of the Japanese national broadcasting company, and the orchestras of Osaka, Kyoto, Nagoya, and Kyushu. In June she completed a 13-concert tour with the Ladies Orchestra Japan, an all-women orchestra she has conducted since it was formed in 1984.

"I want my own orchestra," admits Matsuo, who is a free-lance, "but it's a little hit early. I must get experience with many orchestras and play all the music. I haven's yet played all of Mozart and many modern composers." Her forte is French music, for which she is highly praised by Japanese critics, and her preference is Ravel and Debussy. She admires Italian opera, especially Puccini and Verdi, and she has Merry Widow to much acclaim. She attended the Her aim as a conductor is to "stress the natural flowing of the strong character. I don't want to emphasize certain points. To make a natural stream, so the music breathes naturally, is better for the players and the audience. I want to make Beethoven like Beethoven, to follow his style." Her style restrained and controlled. She is ebullient without being flamboyant and sensitive to ouance without being precious.

While she insists that "men and women are the same in music," in feeling and conducting, she will grudgingly allow that perhaps "women are more sensitive in the small onances and men can build up long passages effec-

It's only a general statement," she added. "There's not a difference because of sex."

Born in 1953 in Nagoya, Matsuo began studying the piano when she was 4. It was her father's idea, she added during an interview in the piano room of her family home in Tokyo.

"I couldn't play the piano well enough to be a great pianist," she said. "The person who can't play any instrument can be a conduc-

I don't want to tered the Tokyo University of Fine Arts and Music for another four-year undergraduate program, majoring in conducting. (It is unusual but not uncommon in Japan for determined women to undertake a second four-year course in a specialized field.)
Matsuo remained in the graduate school of the university for two more years, studying conducting under Kenichiro Kobayashi and Alco Watanabe. In 1982, she enrolled in the conducting course at the Ecole Normale de Musique in Paris, where she studied under Pierre Dervanx. After winning a conducting competition at graduation, she entered the Besançon competition in September.

Asked why many Japanese musicians, especially violinists and pianists, are so successful in international competitions, Matsuo said: "They are very skillful because they have prepared for a long time, and it is a contest of skill. More important is how they develop after the contest. Japanese people do not think much about one's future capacity. They care about now,"

Although Japanese are enthusiastic audiences for famous touring Western orchestras, they tend to disregard performances by local orchestras, according to Mat-

Because tickets for concerts by foreign orchestras cost so much, they go to one expensive European concert rather than three by Japanese orchestras. Consequently, Japanese orchestras are underattended."

At the moment Yoko Matsuo is preparing for a series of con-certs with the Tokyo and Kynshu symphony orchestras. In September she will tour with the Niki-Kai Opera Company's "Merry Widow," In October she will conduct at the Nagoya Music Festival; in November in Kyoto she will direct Japan's perennial year-end favorite, Beethoven's Ninth Symphony.

Unmarried but not uninterested, the vivacious and outspoken Matsuo believes she can combine marriage and career.

"Conducting is just conduct-ing not playing," she explained. "When I have free time, I don't want to listen to music. That's part of my job. There's too much music in a Japanese city, I want some place without it."

The result will be released as a video and album around Christmas, organizers said.

About 90 international art and music personalities have appealed to French political leaders to complete the $200-million Opera de la Bassille. A letter with the French composer-conductor Pierre Boulez's signature at the top said the opera house, particularly its modular theater, "constitutes a great chance for the future of lyric art. for culture in France and in the world." François Leotard, the French culture minister, is expected to decide within a few days' whether to finish the project. Construction was begun in January 1985 and scheduled to be finished in 1989, but major work was halted months ago.
